SUBJECT: PROMISING PRACTICES WEB SITE REDESIGN

This information notice announces the launch of the redesigned Promising Practices Web site. The new look is based on user feedback and provides easier access and timely information on effective workforce development practices throughout California. With the redesign, this Web site is intended for local practitioners to strengthen the statewide workforce development network through information exchange of strategic solutions to workforce issues in their communities or regions.

The Promising Practices Web site covers a broad range of topics including, but not limited to, targeted industries (high growth and emerging industries), regional collaboratives, youth, and employers and businesses.

The Employment Development Department (EDD) Workforce Services Branch will be periodically updating the Web site with new promising practices and invites California's workforce system partners to submit their ideas and successful practices to be highlighted on our Web site. These practices are intended to stimulate creative ideas and share timely information. However, they do not represent an endorsement of a particular practice by EDD.

We look forward to hearing from you. If you have any questions, please contact Charlie Kaplan, Communications and Research Unit Manager, at (916) 653-1681 or wdforum@edd.ca.gov.
